Dear friend,

Here is the latest news on our fight to expose what is really happening in K-12 classrooms. Our relentless efforts are bearing fruits in many places around the country. Corporations in Classrooms: Sexualizing and Indoctrinating America's children

School curricula and library books have come under fire for indoctrinating and sexualizing children. Sadly, this may be just the tip of a looming iceberg bearing down on traditionally schooled and home-schooled children alike.

In 2016, Robin Paterson, a member of the Colorado Chapter of No Left Turn in Education (NLTE) and President of Pornography Is Not Education, made the awful discovery of pornography in our school's online library and has spent the past 6 years researching its origin. Far more insidious than books on a shelf is a school's online library! It is often hidden behind a digital wall, sometimes only accessible by children with special passwords that parents don't have. Electronic shelves are stocked with e-books and modern-day encyclopedias called "research databases" produced by commercial vendors. However, these firms have been accused of embedding pornographic images and advertising, as well as slanted political content in their products. These databases can be found in many school districts in states across the nation.

EBSCO

Explora for Middle and High School Students »

Explora for Middle and High School Students features a simple search that quickly delivers relevant results including articles, essays, and primary source documents to help students feel successful in their research.

- No library card needed when accessing in the library.

Sexually graphic content is displayed in this article from an EBSCO Explora for Secondary School database. As proprietary database content, the embedded images are shielded from internet filters and appear to violate the Children's Internet Protection Act (CIPA). Obscene images have been obscured here as a courtesy to readers.

Database vendors like EBSCO and Cengage GALE are but two of many options which have become virtual staples in K-12 libraries. When pornography, sex shop ads, links to escort sites and adult venues were revealed in their products, the National Center on Sexual Exploitation took the extraordinary step of naming EBSCO to its “Dirty Dozen” list as a leading facilitator of the sexual exploitation of women and children.

With pockets deep enough to fund sophisticated marketing, commercial vendors have convinced America's educational leaders to hand them the keys to the car. Are corporations dictating what students should learn, think...and consume?

Multi-state legislative efforts to curb corporate abuses of trust are underway. New laws have passed in Idaho, Utah, Tennessee, and Oklahoma requiring database vendors to comply with obscenity statutes for minors. But somehow the problem persists. Corporate sanctions are only a slap on the wrist to brazen, repeat offenders. Obscenity statutes for minors are not enforced, often due to outdated “obscenity exemptions” for schools and libraries which pre-date the internet. Database vendors, when forced to confront complaints, seem only to “cherry pick” content in a never-ending shell game. Obscured from parental scrutiny, research databases may also be remarkably well positioned to deliver social propaganda, even to very young children.

On Wednesday, I was haunted by images I've seen of police attack dogs ripping open Black skin during the peaceful protests of the civil rights movement. I remembered the military vehicles confronting mostly Black crowds during the Black Lives Matter protests over the past several years.

To be Black in America is to live with constant trauma.

In America, structural racism has been allowed to fester. In every corner of our society, we've legitimized and defended a culture where White bodies are valued over Black bodies.

Excerpt from an article on “toxic white privilege” in a GALE Elementary School database.
Propaganda such as this can fly below the radar because it will not be disclosed as classroom curricula to inquiring parents.

Surely, the silver lining of the pandemic has been the increased opportunities for parents to scrutinize their school’s resources. However, as more families turn to homeschooling, it can be no coincidence that commercial database vendors are now following children into the public libraries, and even right into their own homes via remotely accessible, “homework” databases. Until this problem is rectified legislatively with strong enforcement, concerned parents must police the online research sources that their children are provided by schools and public libraries.
